Re: Parent Satisfaction Update

Dear Mrs. Heitzmann,

As parents who are committed to securing a quality education for our children we believe we have made an excellent choice in Nativity. It is a choice we would highly recommend to others. We feel Nativity is an academically and spiritually rich environment. We appreciate the integrated curriculum and that this integration extends beyond academic subject areas, to include core II classes like technology lab. The planning and consideration for this type of learning show a commitment to students as well as a cooperative spirit and commitment to professionalism by the teaching faculty. This dedication to education and to one another may account for another positive we have noticed in the way of atmosphere. There is a sincere feeling of warmth and welcome present within this school. Small gestures like the "I'm so glad you're here..." postcard my son received from his homeroom teacher, as well as larger school-wide efforts, like this satisfaction survey, convey a desire to welcome new individuals as well as a willingness to look for opportunities for growth as a community. The combination of both simple and full-scale efforts has made a positive impact on our family. We cannot help but feel it is this commitment to quality education, to professional and personal standards, and to an overall Christian spirit that has allowed Nativity to prosper as an educational institution for almost 50 years.

As a military family, this is the third Catholic school our children have attended. This is the first where we have noticed a seemingly flawless blending of church and school. Nativity as a Church and Nativity as a school, do not appear to be separate institutions, instead they appear to exist as one – completing and complimenting each other. This blending of a strong academic environment as well as a richly religious community is the balance we had hoped to find for our family. It is a wonderful feeling to believe your church and school community share in your commitment to academic excellence and spiritual development.

With sincere thanks,

Major & Mrs. T.R. Dremann Jr.
